Image Messages

The work of Amsterdam based visual artist Martijn Sandberg (1967) constantly explores border areas, such as the tension between text and image, illegible into legible, the private and the public domain. "I make Image Messages, image is message is image." The image hides the message.

In the cut paintings, such as 'Sorry No Image Yet' and 'Im Westen Nichts Neues', there is a subtle play between the language of the image and the significance of the image, and this gives rise to questions. Here, the lack of image seems to be elevated to an image by the artist.

The direct relationship between the image, the material bearing the image and the environment is also expressed in his site-specific works in public space and architecture. As in the artwork 'De Oude Weg Naar De Nieuwe Tijd' that is integrated as brick relief in the walls of the gates and the pavement of building Spaarndammerhart, Amsterdam, and the sculpture 'I Will Survive' located at the border of a burial ground in Hardenberg, The Netherlands.
